4. The legal basis for the Processing of Personal Data

Before we proceed, we would like to explain you in clear and plain language what a “legal basis” means.

As a rule, Personal Data may not be used by anyone (otherwise it would not be personal). There are, however, some cases in which the legal system allows processing: if, for example, you decide to buy an estate unite offered by Palladium or by others company of the Group, and contact us through the form on the site, your data will be used to fulfil such request. Likewise, you may decide to give us your e-mail address to receive promotions and offers from us. In situations of this kind, the Data Controller acts on a valid legal basis, and can therefore legitimately process Personal Data.

In the present case, purposes referred to in points (i) and (ii) sub § 3 are carried out for the execution of pre-contractual measures or for the provision of a service expressly requested by you. This is the case, for example, when you contact us to obtain information on a particular estate unit.

Processing under point (iii) sub § 3 can be only pursued with your free, informed, specific, unequivocal and always revocable consent. In other words, Palladium or any other entity within the Group may not and will not send you offers and other commercial suggestions without your permission.

With regard to the purpose mentioned in point (v) sub § 3, the Data Controller refers to Recital no. 48 of the Regulation according to which companies that are part of a group "may have a legitimate interest in transmitting personal data within the group of undertakings for internal administrative purposes". Consequently, this purpose will be pursued through the legal basis of the legitimate interest of the Data Controller.

5. Modalities, places and times of the processing

The processing of data is carried out under the principles of lawfulness, necessity and relevance with the help of electronic and/or automated means.

Processing is carried out directly at Palladium headquarters by authorised personnel. In some cases, external parties may also process your Data (for example, service companies, professionals and consultants). Such parties are bound to the Controller through a specific act of appointment as external Data Processor. Such act obliges third-parties to comply with the standards imposed by the Regulation, so that your Data is safe. The list of all the subjects involved in the Processing can be requested to the Data Controller at any time.

Your Personal Data will be processed by the Data Controller for the time necessary to achieve the purpose referred to in § 3 (i-iii) of this notice, as indicated in Recital 39 of the Regulation, without prejudice to a further period of retention that may be imposed or permitted by law as also provided for in Recital 65 of the Regulation.

The processing carried out to achieve the purposes referred to in point (iv) of § 3 will take place until you communicate your intention to withdraw your consent. If consent is revoked, the Data Controller will cease processing your personal data for such purposes.

6. Data Communication

The Data Controller may communicate your Data for the Purposes referred to in § 3 [with particular regard to point (v) above] to other companies of the Palladium Group, also

Introduction to cookies and other tracking tools

Generally speaking, cookies are files that store information about your navigation on the website. Cookies will store some details that may help you enjoy your browsing experience (for example, it allows us to ensure that the information on the site in your future visits responds to your preferences).

At the same time, cookies help us to understand some relevant details about the use of our site - for example, to identify most visited pages and contents, and for how long. Through these tools, we can make the site more responsive to your requests and more comfortable to navigate.

Consent to the installation of cookies

European legislation requires operators of websites that use cookies or other similar technologies to inform the user about the types of cookies. In certain cases, the law requires us to request an express consent from you.

There are mainly three types of cookies.

The website operator usually installs technical cookies to guarantee the usual browsing and use of the website (allowing, for example, to make a purchase or authenticate to access restricted areas).

Analytics cookies, similar to technical cookies when used directly by the site operator, are used to collect information in an aggregate form on the number of users and how they visit the site.

Profiling cookies are used to create user profiles and to send advertising messages in line with the preferences expressed by the user when surfing the web.

Cookies can also be distinguished between first-party and third-party cookies (it depends on the subject who manage the cookie and receive the information). We have a first-party cookie if the tool is controlled by the owner of the site, who is then responsible for providing information and indicating how to block the tracking. We talk about third-party cookie when they are managed by a third party other than the site owner. For these cookies, the obligation to inform and indicate the methods for any blockage lies with the third party, while the owner of the site is obliged to insert on the site the link to the site of the third party where these elements are available.
